Course Description

Studies of the physically active and sporting body increasingly focus upon the impact of medicine, technology, media, and performance enhancement. In this course, we examine the body as a surface on which the ideas and power relations of a culture and the environment are inscribed and reinforced. Culture influences the ways we look at body shape and function (the ‘normal’ body, the gendered body, the raced body, the ‘disabled’ body, the toned and fit body, the athletic body, the ‘fat’ body, the ‘aging’ body and the ‘indigenous’ body) and provides blueprints for diagnosis and prescription. Through the organization and regulation of time, space, and the movements of our daily lives, we train, shape and discipline our active and sporting bodies with the stamp of prevailing forms of selfhood, desire, masculinity and femininity, race and indigeneity, sexuality, disability and normalcy.

In this seminar discussion course, therefore, we will examine the many ways in which the body has been controlled and fashioned in modern society through modes of exercise, sport and physical culture and how these views have been incorporated into disciplinary practices through professions such as kinesiology, physiotherapy, sports medicine, coaching and physical education.

Acknowledgement

UBC’s Point Grey Campus is located on the traditional, ancestral and unceded territory of the Musqueam people. The land it is situated on has always been a place of learning for the Musqueam people who for millennia have passed on their culture, history and traditions from one generation to the next on this site.

Course Structure and Evaluation

This course is designed as a research and discussion based class for those interested in studying compelling aspects of physical culture and the sporting and healthy body from a variety of social and cultural perspectives. Grades are based upon a combination of participation, course assignments, book reviews, group discussions and a final research paper. Students will be asked to critically engage with the required course readings as well as attend, participate and occasionally lead in the group seminars.

Specific Learning Objectives
Students in this course will:

- Learn to think critically and creatively about physical culture, sport, and embodied practices and to conduct self-directed learning projects.
- Develop an understanding of the historical and current role of scientific, medical and cultural beliefs about men’s, women’s and children’s bodies in shaping sport and physical culture practices.
- Examine and critique efforts to normalize body size, shape, physical appearance and sporting potential.
- Learn to understand and evaluate social and cultural issues around the gendered, racialized, and sexualized body in sport and physical culture.
- Appreciate the close relationship between the sporting and healthy body and the environment.

Policies and Expectations

Students, whose attendance or performance may be severely affected by medical, emotional or other disabilities, should consult with the instructor early in the term to discuss any special accommodations that might be needed in order to complete course requirements.

Academic Accommodation for Students with Disabilities

The University's goal is to ensure fair and consistent treatment of all students, including students with a disability, in accordance with their distinct needs and in a manner consistent with academic principles. Students with a disability who wish to have an academic accommodation should contact Access and Diversity without delay.

Academic Integrity

All UBC students are expected to behave as honest and responsible members of an academic community. Breach of those expectations or failure to follow the appropriate policies, principles, rules, and guidelines of the University with respect to academic honesty may result in disciplinary action. It is your responsibility to become familiar with the University of British Columbia’s Academic Honesty and Plagiarism Policies, as well as the Student Declaration and the consequences of violating these policies.

Inclusivity Statement

Education is a multidisciplinary field that brings together faculty, students and others from diverse academic and personal backgrounds. UBC’s Faculty of Education is committed to creating a respectful workplace and learning environment that supports inclusion based on the principles of equity, diversity and social justice in order to create an environment that supports its community members’ full participation. The Faculty of Education is committed to providing accessible, usable, and welcoming spaces for faculty, staff, students, and visitors who have disabilities, are members of racialized communities, Indigenous, transgender, two-spirit and gender-diverse people, regardless of their age, sexual orientation, social status, religion, ethno-linguistic, nationality and/or citizenship status.
Please feel welcome to e-mail me your name and pronoun and how you would like these to be used.

Readings and Resources

All required readings are available on Library Course Reserve (available through Canvas) or from the instructor. A variety of extra selected readings are simply suggested for students to engage with according to their own research interests and background. Students in this course are welcome to consult the journal reading room of the Physical Culture and Sport History Lab, Ponderosa Annex F, 101A which has an extensive collection of physical culture related books and journals.

Course Assessment

Assessment 1: General seminar participation – 20%

Individual active participation is an important part of this course throughout the semester. Throughout the semester I will be asking you to participate in a range of activities such as reflections on class readings, peer reviews and sharing your own views on a reading or specific topic or issue. Marks for participation will be obtained through attendance, leading group discussions, and general engagement in class activities.

Assessment 2: Reading and reflections – 20%

Writing, especially critical reflection helps you to engage with the course material at a deeper level and also to develop writing skills more generally. At various times (x4 – sessions 3,5,9,12 or 4,8,10,11) throughout the semester you will be asked to come to class with a written reflection related to the week’s selected reading/s and your opinions on the topic. The reflection should be no more than 1-2 pages double spaced, and should attempt to engage with the material at a deeper/broader level than a simple summary.

Assessment 3: Midterm book review 20%

Each student may select a book relevant to his or her particular research interests in the study of physical culture and the moving body (in discussion with the instructor) and develop a potentially publishable 2-3 page review. We will discuss in class how to produce good book reviews, and follow up with the best reviews to seek appropriate journal outlets for publication.

Assessment 4: Final paper and presentation 40% (30% paper/10% presentation)

Students are asked to develop a final paper that investigates in depth a particular research topic related to their personal and professional interests around the study of physical culture and in relation to the broad themes of the course, max 20 pages including references.

Each student will have the opportunity to discuss the development of their paper with the instructor at regular intervals, and present highlights from the final project in a class presentation towards the end of the semester.
