

Law (As of January 2020).

Additional education: Law School

A person involved in Sports Law manages legal issues at a college/university or professional level such as the Olympics. Sports law could also take the form of Health Policy development. Persons in the field would work in areas of ethical conduct and various sections of financial aid, recruiting, gender equity and academic standards (University Level).

Prerequisite/Suggested courses for Peter A. Allard School of Law

To be eligible for selection, an applicant must have:

1. obtained an undergraduate degree in an approved course of studies from a degree-granting university; or
2. successfully completed the first three years (minimum 90 credits) or more of an approved course of studies leading to an undergraduate degree at UBC or completed the equivalent at a degree-granting university; or
3. successfully completed the first two years of studies leading to an undergraduate degree at UBC or other degree-granting university, and be currently enrolled in the third year of the degree program. (An offer of admission will be conditional on successful completion of the third year by June 30 with a minimum of 90 credits at UBC, or the equivalent at a degree-granting university, and maintenance of the academic average obtained in the first two years of studies. 30 of the 90 credit requirement must be completed at the senior level)

The median applicant accepted has an academic average of approximately 83%, with an LSAT score of 166 (93rd percentile). The academic average and LSAT score are weighted equally. In calculating the academic average, only those years of undergraduate study making up the first undergraduate degree that are complete at the time of deadline for application are considered, except for item 3 above, where the applicant must maintain the overall standing of the first two years of studies.
