Accessibility

We are living through an extraordinary time, and you may need to take your notes, whether you are reviewing a paper or viewing one of the lectures. The accessibility of your course material will depend on your personal circumstances, and you can reach out to your Teaching Assistant or the Accessibility & Diversity Office for support.

Your Presence in the Virtual Classroom

Your presence in the virtual classroom is expected and documented. The School of Kinesiology will not normally consider special accommodation for absences without documentation. Authorized absences include, but are not limited to, those who have registered with Access & Diversity. Students whose absences are not considered authorized, such as those who are not registered with Access & Diversity, may be withdrawn from the course on the recommendation of the instructor. The UBC Academic Concession is a privilege, not a right, and can be granted only by the Director of Access & Diversity.

Plagiarism

Plagiarism is considered a violation of the UBC's academic integrity policy. It is not acceptable to copy content without attribution and to submit it as your own work. If you have any doubts about what constitutes plagiarism, please consult the UBC Academic Integrity website.
